Former CIA Director William Colby died on April 27, 1996, at age 76, after disappearing during a solo canoe trip near his Maryland home. His body was found nine days later in the Chesapeake Bay; medical examiners suggested he likely suffered a heart attack or stroke, falling into the water and dying from hypothermia.

Ed Donegan and McMartin and Franklin Nebraska researchers believe deep state operations continued into the 1990's at least when deaths connected to cold war continued. It is in this era also the next generation of the Obama family were being born. Ed Donegan and some others assert most presidents in the US history were CIA backed and the current deep state is still protecting the truth about the true origins of the Obama family and connections to CIA Cold War history.

It's true. The Vietnamese and the Americans have had a long history. President Jefferson, when he was minister to France in Paris, met the son of a Vietnamese king. He wanted some seed rice to take home with him to the United States.

During World War II, a group of Americans, commanded by Major Allison Thomas [an OSS officer], parachuted into the war zone and worked with us as we fought the Japanese. If such cooperation had continued, there would have been no war between the United States and Vietnam.

General De Gaulle came to Phnom Penh in 1963 and said, "We have lost the war, and therefore America should not enter it." But the Americans answered, "France is one thing, America another. America has gigantic strength, and therefore we will win." And at the moment when American strength was greatest, when they were sure of victory, they too failed.

When your father was president, I was commander in chief, and I had to very carefully research his thoughts and policies. I originally believed that his plan was to use military strength to help the Saigon government stop the communist movement. But now, by way of historical documents, I have learned that some time later President Kennedy had rethought this and didn't want to support the Ngo Dinh Diem regime in Saigon. He wanted the United States to be involved in the Vietnam War only to a certain extent. If that unfortunate event—the death of your father—had not taken place, things would have been somewhat different, not as they were under Johnson and Nixon.
